Frankel, Aide To Rusk, Is Columbia Prof.; Author; N. Y. State Civil Liberties Head; Got Fellowships; Was Naval Officer In War

Dr. Charles Frankel, a professor of philosophy at Columbia University, chosen by President Johnson as Assistant Secretary of State for Educational and Cultural Affairs, is a 47-year-old scholar and writer. He replaced Harry C. McPherson Jr., who will become a full-time special assistant and counsel to the President, says the New York Times. For the last few months Mr. McPherson has been acting in this job on loan from the State Department.

Aside from contributing to professional journals, Professor Frankel has written a number of articles and books for the general public. His most recent books are "The Democratic Prospect" and "The Case For Modern Man."

He has been awarded the Woodbridge Prize in philosophy at Columbia, and has received Guggenheim and Carnegie Institute fellowships. He has also served as a Fulbright research professor.

Professor Frankel is a director of the New York State Civil Liberties Union and a member of the National Assembly for the Teaching of the Principles of the Bill of Rights. He had been serving as a consultant to the Bureau of Educational and Cultural Affairs, which he will now direct.

The bureau is entrusted with planning and arranging official United States cultural activities abroad, as well as most types of cultural exchange programs. Cultural exchanges with the Soviet Union and Eastern Europe are still under the aegis of the Bureau of European Affairs.

The bureau also supervises the Fulbright Scholarship program, under which United States students are sent to study abroad.

Mr. McPherson, who was appointed to the State Department a year ago, served previously as Deputy Under Secretary of the Army. Before that he was a staff assistant to Mr. Johnson when he was Senate majority leader, says the New York Times, and later a legislative counsel to Senator Mike Mansfield, who currently holds that post.

Dr. Frankel told the New York Times that he would take a leave of absence from Columbia University to serve in his new post. He discussed the President's nomination, which is subject to Senate confirmation, at his rural home at 317 Phillips Hill Road, Washington.

Dr. Frankel, a native of New York, graduated from Columbia in 1937 with honors in English and philosophy, did a year's graduate work at Cornell and joined the Columbia faculty in 1939. He married Miss Helen Beatrice Lehman in 1941. They have two children, Susan, and Carl.

During World War II from 1942 to 1946, he was a lieutenant in the Navy, serving as a military intelligence and military government officer on Tinian, near Saipan. Returning to Columbia in 1946, he took his Ph.D. and in 1947 won the Woodbridge Prize in philosophy. He was named a full professor in 1956.

He has held a series of lectureships and fellowships in Washington and abroad. Besides his works in social philosophy, he also has published a children's book that he originally wrote for his daughter, "The Bear and the Beaver" (1951). He has been on the board of Current magazine since 1960 and is an occasional contributor to magazines including The New York Times Magazine and The New York Times Book Review.

Political Line-Up For November Election Reflects Effect Of Dissension Between Eshkol And Ben-Gurion

Eighteen Israeli political parties submitted lists of candidates for the November general election. The rosters disclosed some political reshuffling. The lists include each party's priority of candidates for the Knesset, or Parliament. Under Israel's proportional representation system, says James Feron, of the New York Times, voters cast ballots for parties rather than candidates.

The parties are allowed parliamentary seats in proportion to their share of the total vote. The Knesset members are taken from the election lists, whose priority could not be changed after September 7.

The ruling Mapai party, headed by Premier Levi Eshkol, submitted a joint list with its coalition partners, the Ahdut Avodah. The first ten names were predictably a list of the present Cabinet. Mr. Eshkol included few new names. Those with a chance of inclusion in the next Knesset included party officials and personal aides.

Mr. Eshkol's split with former Premier David Ben-Gurion brought about a significant change in the Mapai line-up. Dov Joseph, Minister of Justice, who had supported Mr. Ben-Gurion before casting his lot with Mr. Eshkol, was moved down the list.

Mr. Ben-Gurion himself headed the list of his splinter party, the Israel Workers, called Rafi from its Hebrew initials. A writer, Ishar Smilansky, was a surprise choice for the Number two position, a virtual certainty for inclusion in the next Parliament.

Maj. Gen. Moshe Dayan, a Ben-Gurion backer, who hesitated until the last week in August before formally joining Rafi, was dropped to seventh position. A former Israeli chief of staff, and until recently Minister of Agriculture under Mr. Eshkol, says the New York Times, General Dayan is thought to be one of Mr. Ben-Gurion's close associates.

Rafi's bid to gain votes from Israel's rapidly expanding non-European community apparently prompted the inclusion in the Number Four position of Mrs. Matilda Geha, a schoolteacher and member of a prominent Tunisian family.

Gideon Hausner, former Attorney General and chief prosecutor during the trial of Adolf Eichmann, was placed in the fourth position on the Independent Liberals' list. He stands a good chance of a Knesset seat in this position.

Other parties include the Herut Liberals, an amalgamation of parties that ran separately in 1961; two Communist parties that recently split over pro-Arab and pro-Jewish leanings; three religious parties; the left-wing Mapam party; two pro-Government Arab parties, and a number of new groupings.

One of the new groups is an Arab party affiliated with Rafi. Two others have submitted lists representing non-European Jewish groups. A new "Socialist" party is made up for Arabs who were members of the recently outlawed pro-Nasser El Ard movement.

The list also included Uri Avnery, editor of the sensationalist weekly, Haolem Hazeh. Mr. Avnery has asked his readers to give him parliamentary immunity from what he has described as a harsh and unfair libel law that is tougher with weeklies than with daily newspapers. Abie Nathan, owner of the California Bar and Grill in Tel Aviv, has said that if elected, says the New York Times, he will fly his own plane to the United Arab Republic to negotiate a lasting peace.

Children of Envoy To Bonn Raise Israeli Flag At Embassy

The blue and white flag of Israel, bearing the Star of David, which Hitler compelled German Jews to wear as a badge of shame, was hoisted in front of the Israeli Embassy in Bonn. Ashar Ben-Nathan, the first Israeli Ambassador to West Germany, presiding over the ceremony immediately after having presented his credentials to Dr. Georg August Zinn, president of the Bundesrat or Federal Council, the Upper House of Parliament, says the New York Times. Dr. Zinn was acting for President Heinrich Lubke, who is on vacation.

Mr. Ben-Nathan, in the presence of the embassy staff and one hundred German Jews, made the one-sentence announcement in Hebrew that "the Israeli Embassy has been officially opened" on German soil.

The Ambassador then led the audience in singing the Israeli national anthem, "Hatikva," (Hope), while his son, Amnon, seventeen years old, and, daughter Miryam, ten, raised the Israeli flag to the top of the twenty-foot pole that had been erected on the lawn of the embassy.

At the same time the paper that had masked the bronze plaque at the entrance, with the inscription, "Israeli Embassy", in Hebrew and French, was removed.

Mr. Ben-Nathan then held a reception within the embassy at which he offered a toast to Israel — in Israel champagne. Later he deposited a wreath at the only synagogue left in Cologne.

The Cologne Synagogue was destroyed by the Nazis in 1938 but was rebuilt after World War II. The wreath was placed at the memorials to the Jewish victims of the Nazis.

One of these invites the visitor to pause "in silent meditation" over the six million "murdered innocent people" and the other commemorates the 11,000 members of the Jewish community of Cologne who "died for their faith in the dark time."

Three indifferent German youths stood at the gate leading to the embassy garden during the flag-raising ceremony, but there were no spectators at all when Mr. Ben-Nathan arrived at the Presidential Palace in Bonn, the Villa Hammerschmidt, to present his credentials.

In accordance with standard diplomatic practice, President Lübke's car, a Mercedes 300, and four

Shabby, Yearly Donor Of $ One Million To Welfare Won Five Degrees In Seven Years; Was Lawyer, Economist; Police, Public Health, Real Estate, Stock Market Expert

Dr. Leonhard Felix Fuld, a self-made multimillionaire and shy philanthropist who dispensed about $1 million annually, died, in Trenton, New Jersey, at Helene Fuld Hospital. He was 82 years old. Dr. Fuld, who lived much of his life as a recluse, was also a lawyer, economist, and expert in police administration and public health, says the New York Times. He held five degrees from Columbia University, all earned in a period of six years.

Dr. Fuld's fortune of about $25 million, which he made in real estate and the stock market, is held in perpetual trust by the Helene Fuld Foundation, named for his mother. He set up the agency to promote his special interest — the health of student nurses.

From 1956 until he became ill last year, Dr. Fuld had lived in a modest house at 91 Fuld Street in North Trenton. The city had renamed the street for him to honor his work at the Helene Fuld Hospital, to which he gave more than $2.5 million over the years.

He leaves no immediate survivors. Burial was at Beth-El Cemetery, in Brooklyn. At his request, there was no funeral service.

The [illegible] operated in many hospitals [illegible] Coast, [illegible] old man, with a Phi Beta Kappa key dangling by a gold chain from his lapel would appear in the reception room and inquire after the health of the student nurses.

He was often ejected, but when he was not, the hospital became the beneficiary of a new nurses residence, a scholarship program or even a new wing. More than twenty hospitals from Springfield, Mass., to Johnson City, Tenn., now have student-nurse facilities named for the donor.

The benefactor in each case was Dr. Fuld, a publicity-shy man whose life was an indelible mixture of the humane, the eccentric, and the successful.

Dr. Fuld was forever surprising people, either by his knowledge or his gifts. Men who had dealings with him for years knew nothing about him except that he presented certified checks to their institutions from time to time.

For much of his life he lived with his sister, Florentine, in a tenement he owned at 130 East 110th Street. In 1956 Miss Fuld died of malnutrition at the Hospital for Joint Diseases, says the New York Times, to which her brother had given money. Before she died she said she had not left the house in nine years.

The death of his only relative brought a change in the life of the thin, bowed, bald little man. He moved to Trenton and set himself up in a house. "I figured the time had come for me to start protecting myself a little bit more realistically for my future with people," he explained.

Thereafter he got around a bit more, often taking a train to visit one of his projects. Sometimes he traveled with a student nurse. At each project he would take out a worn black notebook and jot down the names of nurses who were ill. On his next visit, he would check to see if they had improved.

In the last two years he became increasingly ill and had to curtail his visits. When he did go, he traveled by hired limousine. For the last year, he was too debilitated to travel at all.

Dr. Fuld was born in New York City on August 12, 1883. His father was a wholesale merchant. His mother, the former Helene Schwab died in 1923. As a youth, he attended Public School 87, Public School 83, and Horace Mann High School.

In 1902 he entered Columbia and completed the requirements for the B.A. degree in one year. He earned an M.A. in 1904, and Bachelor of Laws in 1905, a Master of Laws in 1906, and a Ph.D. in 1909.

During his time at Columbia, he told an interviewer many years later, he worked as secretary to Nicholas Murray Butler, the University's president.

In 1909 he became a civil service examiner for the city. He spent his days in the office and his nights in precinct stationhouses. "I felt, you see," he once said, "that the only way I could properly examine candidates was to actually see first hand what problems policemen faced."

In 1910 he produced a 1,100-page book entitled "Police Administration" that became a standard work. He was instrumental in the planning of the New York Police Academy. One of his last bequests, in 1963, was for advanced training of officers at the New Jersey State Police Academy.

Dr. Fuld worked for the city until 1918. In the next few years he held similar posts in Rochester and Washington. Then he was hired by Henry L. Doherty, says the New York Times, the president of Cities Service, to set up a school for security salesmen.

It was this experience that gave him his knowledge of the stock market. He often said that he had to study at night to keep ahead of his students. From 1923 to 1945 Dr. Fuld was an evening instructor in economics and business administration at the Bernard M. Baruch School of Business and Public Administration of City College.

Dr. Fuld was always vague about how he made his money. He would only say that he put the precepts he taught into practice and that he never sold a stock once he bought it. Some friends assumed that his initial capital was provided by a small inheritance. He held extensive real estate in East Harlem and elsewhere.

Dr. Fuld maintained a continuing interest in the dissemination of knowledge about the stock market, and was proud of his membership in the New York Society of Security Analysts.

In 1958 he bought one share of each stock sold on the New York Stock Exchange to be presented on his death to the Wharton School of Finance and Commerce at the University of Pennsylvania. He explained that in addition to the income, the school would obtain the financial statements of each of the companies and be able to send students to stockholders' meetings.

He managed all his own investments and wrote all his correspondence in longhand — about 5,000 letters a year. Some institutions to which he gave gifts recalled that they would receive postcards from him commenting on the bequest or, on occasion, announcing that it had ended.

Dr. Fuld was a tireless worker. He arose at 4 A.M. and did not retire until about 11 P.M. At his tenements, he often performed janitorial services.

THE THIRTY-THREE CARDINALS COME TO TIBERIAS

By Viscount Edwin Samuel, in the Jewish Frontier; author of "The Cucumber King"

The little town of Tiberias, hidden six hundred feet right down below sea level in the Jordan Valley, is Israel's forgotten city. Many people come to Tiberias for the hot baths, or to escape the winter. But little ever actually happens in Tiberias: the most exciting event of the day occurs in mid-morning, when the bus arrives from Tel Aviv with — or sometimes without — the daily papers.

As for foreign journals, you might as well be on the moon. Some periodical occasionally arrives from England or America, a week or a month later, and gathers dust on the news agent's counter. Hence it is not surprising that Tiberias lives largely on rumors.

If you whisper in someone's ear that you've heard on reliable authority that the town's leading pauper is building a magnificent villa, with three bathrooms, you'll not only be believed, but the pauper will be criticized for his miserliness in having only three bathrooms. If you spread the slander that a respected Orthodox Jew in Tiberias is thinking of sending his eldest son to the local Christian Mission school, the news will be lapped up and regaled all round Tiberias.

Even the rumor that a Tiberias woman of indescribable ugliness, already in her sixties, has been offered marriage by a wealthy American tourist will lead to instant speculation on the color of her wedding dress. And since His Holiness, the Pope, passed through Tiberas, which in itself is incredible, Tiberias is willing to believe anything.

The excitement of the Pope's visit was beginning to die down; and the visitors in the Aley Kinneret Hotel were just sitting back in their deck-chairs on the terrace overlooking the Sea of Galilee, when a new wave of excitement passed through the hotel lobbies. The staff were gathered in knots, discussing the latest piece of information. Thirty-three Cardinals would lunch at the hotel tomorrow! If the Pope comes in person, why shouldn't half the Sacred College?

When I pointed out that a momentous event like this would surely have been mentioned in the newspapers, or would at least be the subject of a phone call from the Israel Foreign Ministry in Jerusalem, my doubts were brushed aside.

"It's the Yelltours Travel Agency in Tel Aviv who sent us the message. Yelltours are very reliable," explained the Hotel Manageress. "They have never let us down before. Look, here's their telegram. It says quite distinctly: '33 cardinals for lunch tomorrow Friday fish for all.'"

It wasn't at all surprising, of course, that, if the thirty-three Cardinals were touring Galilee, that they should want to lunch at the Aley Kinneret. After all, it is the best hotel in town, the one where Ben-Gurion, when Prime Minister, used regularly to spend a week to two every winter.

The Aley Kinneret lies by the Lake, at the north end of the town, where the road from Nazareth comes down to the shore, just beyond a round-tower of the medieval city wall. One way, you walk along the quay, with its fish restaurants and its bars. Little tables are placed along the water's edge, where the quayside is decorated with municipal flower-boxes — one of the few manifestations of activity on the part of that somewhat somnolent authority.

So you sit at your little table, drinking your iced beer and look across the Lake to the mournful Syrian hills on the other side. In the strong sunshine, at noon, they look bare, tawny and uninhabited. In the late afternoon, when the light becomes horizontal, you can pick out the distant dark plantations up the slopes. At night, you can even see the lights of several Syrian villages on the top of the plateau glitter and twinkle against the deep-blue sky.

If you go the other way along the Lake front, you leave the crowd strolling up and down the quay and enter by a private gate into the garden around the Aley Kinneret Hotel. Here and there, date palms grow out of the lush, subtropical vegetation. All day and all night you can hear the water lapping against the black basalt retaining wall along the edge of the hotel grounds. You can almost imagine that you're on some expensive winter cruise, completely away from it all. Overshadowing one edge of the sun-deck — I mean the terrace — is an old grove of eucalyptus trees that rustle in the breeze. It's these that give the hotel its name — Aley Kinneret, the Leaves of Kinneret.

You would never guess, when you looked up at the multi-storeyed new hotel wings, that the Aley Kinneret had originally been built out and over an old garage. Yet it's true. It is Kurt Halbracht's old motor-repair shop, with its thick and clumsy concrete walls, now sheathed inside with marble, that provides the cool lounge. The roof skylights are still there, but carefully curtained during the day against the fierce heat of the sun. Only at night can you see up through them to the densely star-studded sky. With some fine oriental rugs on the tiled floor, some good pictures on the walls, and some excellent sculpture in the garden, the dingy garage has burst its chrysalis and developed into a gay butterfly — a modern hotel.

Nothing in the Aley Kinneret is ever over-done: you feel everywhere a spirit of sturdy common sense. There is the minimum of chi-chi and of formality. You never think of filling out a laundry list: you just hand your linen to a housemaid, and back it comes in due course, complete, fresh, and spotless. A few envelopes and some writing-paper are provided for each guest; but who has the energy, in the languid air of Tiberias, to write letters?

The hotel isn't very large; but you have in it a feeling of spaciousness, as if you were in a very select country-club. And all this is due largely to the manageress — Tottie Reisenberg. Tottie is an outstanding hotelier, and not only in Tiberias or in Israel generally: she could held her own with ease in the Ritz in London. Gray-haired, sturdily built, intelligent and energetic, she is here, there and everywhere. She regards her guests, her staff and even herself with a faint air of amusement.

Hotels nowadays never talk about customers or clients; they talk about their guests. And at the Aley Kinneret you really feel like one. You are Tottie's guest, a warmly-welcomed member of some perpetual country-house party. It's a great evening when Tottie dines at your table.

It isn't easy to run a hotel, especially a Jewish hotel, anywhere in the world; and to run a Jewish hotel in Israel, with its strict kashrut and Sabbath observance regulations, requires phenomenal courage. Even at the Aley Kinneret, if you want milk in your coffee after a meat meal, you have to sit at another table.

And don't forget that you're in Tiberias, a provincial backwater, where it's terribly hot throughout the long summer. Then the ancient thermal baths are almost deserted. It's hard to persuade experienced hotel staff even to try Tiberias, and even harder to persuade them to stay on. But Tottie had the art, years ago, of finding first-class assistants, training them to an even finer edge, imbuing them with a fierce loyalty to the Aley Kinneret and to herself.

Take Mr. Bahama, pale, round-eyed behind his spectacles, who runs the Front Office. He's been there for years and years. Or, if you will, take Frieda, the vigilant housekeeper, who must walk at least a dozen miles a day along the hotel corridors. It's perhaps no coincidence that none of them is married. They owe allegiance only to the Aley Kinneret.

For them, it's the only hotel in the world worth working for; and their pride in it is as great as that of subalterns in the Royal Brigade of Guards. And, like a crack regiment, the Aley Kinneret is the hotel where everyone now wants to come and work. For to have been trained by Tottie is a passport to any other hotel in the whole wide world.

Occasionally, one of her disciples is tempted away to some larger and more expensive establishment, where the tips are higher. But, sooner or later, they always come running back to Tottie, like the Prodigal Son.

Tottie commands a taut ship. If anything should go amiss (and that happens but rarely), a court-martial by the senior officers is held on the spot, the causes determined, action immediately taken; and that's that. As a result, the hotel runs as if on wheels. Everyone knows not only his or her own job, but can pitch in wherever needed.

There's no false pride. The barman will double on the tambourine, whenever there's a dance. The headwaiter is not too lordly to serve at the bar; and even Frieda will help out as a waitress at peak periods. In fact, there are half a dozen people in the Aley Kinneret who can (and do) run it perfectly, for weeks at a time, in Tottie's absence.

Even in her assortment of guests, Tottie always manages somehow to get the right mixture. Most are Israelis from the larger cities; not the very rich, but those well enough off to afford her prices. They include physicians, gay professors, businessmen and senior civil servants. It's the doctors and the businessmen who are continuously being called on the loudspeaker, in a flat, Hebrew monotone: "Dr. Kugelmacher wanted on the telephone, please; Dr. Kugelmacher on the telephone. Thank you." Such an announcement is one of our few moments of realization that there is still a world outside.

Then there's a stream of Israel Government VIP guests — members of Parliament and Senators; Mayors and Nobel Prize winners, each with a bear-leader provided by the Israel Foreign Ministry. A third group consists of third or fourth generation Anglo-Jews, businessmen all. These are no Yossele Cohens or Hymie Levys, Winitzkys or Kodliarhuks; they and their mink-clad mates have been transformed into Anglo-Saxons — Mr. Richards, Mr. Gibson and Mr. Kay.

With what satisfaction do they and their wives greet their gentlemanly names, painted large in Indian ink on their table cards, standing up like little tombstones for everyone else to see. "Oh, look Norman! They've got our name on our table!"

Lastly, there are the elderly, retired and retiring Englishmen with their wives in sensible shoes — artists, writers and pensioned ex-civil servants — seeking a long quiet spell away from Britain's cold. No; Tottie never makes a mistake: there is never too much of anything — invalids, noisy children, garish Americans, Orthodox rabbis, and their sheiteled young wives, nudniks, piano-strummers and bridge fiends.

We've now dealt with the residents; but then there are the transients — the casual tourists who arrive in busloads for lunch, served in a separate dining-room. And it is this room that has been cleared for the thirty-three Cardinals. Fish is no problem; for is there not literally at the hotel's doorstep unlimited numbers of St. Peter's fish? The Lake fishermen bring them in every morning — fresh, large, fat and spiky, delicious when fried. But, what do the hotel guests generally want besides fish?

It is difficult for Tottie to find a menu satisfactory to all her guests. There is no definite style yet of indigenous Israeli cooking. So her menus include a little of everything — Russian, Polish, and Jewish; Hungarian, American, and English; French, Italian, Arab, and German, but basically German.

This is clearly to be seen when (and if) you come down to breakfast and are greeted by a sideboard of truly baronial proportions, covered by a multitude of platters for your choice. There is every available kind of cheese; every sort of salted fish; slices of green and red peppers; saucers of green and black olives; tomatoes from the Jordan Valley itself; delicious French rolls baked in Tiberias overnight.

And the Aley Kinneret is one of the few hotels, restaurants or bars in Israel where you can get the juice of fresh oranges, the national crop. Elsewhere in Israel, fresh orange juice is regarded as too much trouble to prepare and detracting from the sale of high-profit liquor.

Service in the Aley Kinneret dining-rooms, with their little tables covered with freshly laundered linen, is superlative. To serve a hundred people at a time, at separate tables, each group arriving at a different time, requires not only the will but the experience.

And here Tottie has performed her major miracle, the training of a picked team of matched fillies, Jewish girls from the most primitive communities of Tiberias. All are about the same age, height, and build; all have lovely milk-maid complexions.

Each is dressed according to her own simple taste; here a tartan skirt and there a black; one with a black blouse, another with a white, but all with the regulation hotel aprons. Their natural youthful energy has been tamed until they move with regal grace. There are no service tables at the Aley Kinneret, and each girl floats out of the kitchen swing-door, bearing a loaded tray, straight to an individual table.

They glide between the tables as in some intricate and well-rehearsed ballet, never dawdling, never pushing, never arguing with each other (at least never within the hearing of the guests). They have a smattering of half-a-dozen languages, speaking largely Arabic among themselves. But they mostly keep silence, with faint detached smiles playing round their mouths as if they are princesses incognito and will soon hurry off to dress up for the ball.

Their eyes are constantly on their tables, looking out for each guest's needs; then knowing expertly what to do next, without ever needing orders. Occasionally, some chronically dyspeptic guest will baulk at a second helping of one of the courses in the lavish meal. Then a little frown will pucker up their brow as if this were a fault of the Aley Kinneret and, thus, of their own. Then they plead, "Oh, do have some more! Or is there anything else you'd like instead?"

And always hovering in the background Tottie, Frieda and Mr. Bahama. Each guest thus has constant visible proof that he is being looked after, that he is important. His ego lies back soothed and relaxed.

So Tottie and her staff were completely confident that they could cope with thirty-three or any other number of Cardinals. The tourist shop in the hotel lobby was alerted; the highly colored postcards of the Church on the Mount of the Beatitudes and of the ancient synagogue at Capernaum were prominently displayed. Little albums of pressed flowers from the Holy Land; olivewood trinket boxes and, oh yes, of course, dozens of rosaries were laid out on the counter: it will be a big occasion.

Every one of the staff assumes their action stations. Mr. Bahama sidles round on a final inspection, straightening a chair here, a table there, hiding away the fashion magazines (left by previous guests) displaying bikini-clad models, so unsuitable for the eyes of the Sacred College. And then he joins Tottie and Frieda at the garden gate to await the arrival of the Vatican party.

Christian Arabs, hearing the news, have come in from all the surrounding villages, bearing the

What you'll love about Surprising Amsterdam

Suddenly, Amsterdam is one of the four most popular cities in Europe, along with London, Paris and Rome. Why is Amsterdam suddenly being "discovered"? Read on:

Friendly people. They smile at you, treat you like a guest, not a tourist. And they speak your language. Amsterdam is the gentle, friendly way to ease yourself into Europe.

A city with character. Amsterdam is a beautiful, picturesque city. It has all the sophistication of London, the gaiety of Paris, the grandeur of Rome—yet it has special flavour all its own.

It's a swinging town. No city in Europe has so high a per-person ratio of cafes featuring variety acts, exotic dancers, jazz and other after-dark divertissements.

A city for food lovers. Amsterdam abounds with good restaurants. You can eat in 12 different languages—from Spanish to Indonesian.

Amsterdam is a city of music. You'll be serenaded by gaily-painted barrel organs, hear more carillons than in any other city. It has one of the world's six best symphony orchestras—the famous Concertgebouw Orchestra.

Amsterdam for sightseeing. It has more canals than Venice, crossed by 636 bridges. Within an hour's drive there are 12 medieval castles. You can see the Anne Frank house. Visit the building once considered the "eighth wonder of the world"—the Royal Palace.

Amsterdam is a city of art. You can see the world's greatest collection of Rembrandts, no less than 170 priceless van Goghs, and steed yourself in the Golden Age of Dutch painting.

Amsterdam airport for tax-free shopping. Shop for such things as Swiss watches, German cameras, French perfumes—the range of goods will amaze you, and so will the prices.

Amsterdam is the hub of Europe. It's the best place to start a European tour. It's smack in the middle of Europe's capitals. Distances are short. And KLM's connections are superb.

City-hop at no extra air fare. KLM lets you visit extra cities for the price of the fare to just one. Example: Plan your final destination to be Rome, and get up to 15 extra cities free.

KLM lets you Pay-Later. No need to put a dent in your savings, fly now with KLM for just 10% down, the rest over 24 months.

See your travel agent—that's a must!

The first and most important step in planning any trip is to see your travel agent. He can save you money, save you time, spare you headaches. He is a professional who's "been there". His services won't cost you a cent, so see him soon.

Because we don't fiddle around when we make gefilte fish! We use only the plumpest, juiciest, young fish—fresh from icy Northern lakes. We add just the right pinch of spices. Then—just like the mothers of old—we slow simmer our gefilte fish to bring out all its tender, delicate flavor. Result: Mother's gefilte fish has that traditional taste and texture that's just like homemade. THE THIRTY-THREE CARDINALS COME TO TIBERIAS traditional olive-tree twigs, with their narrow velvety leaves, as identification of their faith, in hope of securing a benediction from at least one of the thirty-three Cardinals. An old woman, sitting on the curb opposite the hotel entrance, has sewn two olive leaves in the form of a cross on the lapel of her best, but sadly faded, mauve velvet jacket of Victorian cut. On either side of her, sit two other crones, one spinning wool, and the other winding it into a ball while she, in the middle, takes up the slack. Tottie nudges Mr. Bahama and whispers "Look over there at the Three Fates in person!"

Young Jewish men from Tiberias, wearing narrow trousers and pointed Italian shoes, are listening to a portable transistor set, waiting for mention of the visit and the exact hour when the august party is expected to reach Tiberias. Nothing yet has been announced; but no matter, the thirty-three Cardinals are on their way: the whole town knows it and waits in patience.

A horse-drawn kerosene tank passes between the rows of the inhabitants on its way to house-to-house delivery in the suburbs. It is followed on foot by the municipal streetcleaner, an old Moroccan Jew with a long white beard, his head hooded in his cream-colored woolen Moroccan cloak. He shuffles along in his red slippers, pushing in front of him the latest in sanitation department equipment . . a vertical aluminum barrel on wheels, complete with long, gleaming, aluminum-handled shovel, rake, and broom. But he still prefers his own little battered dustpan, and bends down, lovingly sweeping up the fresh manure with his hand, as every competent streetsweeper in the East has done since time immemorial.

His work is interrupted by the screech of brakes as a couple of huge special de luxe Tourist Corporation motorbuses come rolling down the hill. All eyes are strained for the first glimpse of the purple scapulars of the thirty-three Cardinals. There is no mistake about it: the roofs are piled high with suitcases and carry big banners stretched between poles — "The Cardinals' Holy Land Tour."

The buses pull in through the gates and draw up in front of the Aley Kinneret. Out troop the thirty-three men. They are much younger than is usual with Cardinals; and, in place of a purple scapular, each wears a little blue and white cotton "dunce's cap" — the Kova tembel — used by Israeli schoolchildren, and often affected by foolish young American student visitors.

These are Americans all right, but no students. They unfurl their flag and march into the hotel lobby for their fish lunch — the St. Louis Cardinals baseball team — all thirty-three of them.

N. Y. ALLOWS SABBATH-OBSERVER TO RUN BUSINESS ON SUNDAY WITH NON-FAMILY HELP

The Court of Appeals, New York State's highest court, recently upheld a lower court ruling making it permissible for a Sabbath observer to operate his business on Sunday with the help of non-family employees. The ruling was hailed by the American Jewish Congress, which filed "amicus curiae" (friend-of-the-court) briefs in the case before the Appellate Division and the Court of Appeals.

The Congress entered the case at the request of Philip Schwebel, an Orthodox Jewish lumber dealer of Brooklyn. Mr. Schwebel's lawyer, Abraham M. Stanger, asked AJCongress to file the friend-of-the-court brief. Eric L. Keisman, of 360 Lexington Avenue, a lawyer and member of the Congress' Commission on Law and Social Action, was assigned by the Congress to draft the brief in both the Appellate Division and Court of Appeals. Mr. Schwebel was convicted in Kings County Criminal Court of violating New York City's Sunday law on the ground that he conducted his business, Mister Lumber, Inc., of 300 Greenpoint Avenue, Brooklyn, with the help of four employees.

The city law, enacted in 1963, permits Sabbatarians to operate their business on Sunday provided they observe another day of the week for rest and prayer. But the law is limited to so-called "mama-papa" stores that are "conducted . . . by the proprietor and members of his immediate family."

The American Jewish Congress brief urged that the law be liberally interpreted to exempt the owner of a business with non-family employees so long as the conduct and management of the business remained in family hands. The Appellate Division in a decision handed down last January accepted the arguments advanced in the brief and held that the New York City Sunday law "does not prescribe the employment of others in the conduct of a business."

The Court of Appeals unanimously affirmed the Appellate Division ruling. It issued no separate opinion.

In welcoming the decision, the American Jewish Congress termed the ruling "pivotal" and noted that it would have application throughout the State of New York in view of the legislature's enactment in June of a law permitting towns and villages throughout the state to exempt Sabbath observers who operate "mama-papa" establishments from the Sunday-closing law. The 1963 state law gave permission only to New York City to pass local legislation exempting Sabbatarians who conduct small family businesses.

Working with Mr. Keisman on the American Jewish Congress briefs were Marvin M. Karpatkin, chairman of the Commission on Law and Social Action of the New York Metropolitan Council of the American Jewish Congress, and Milton J. Schubin, a member of the CLSA panel of volunteer lawyers.

The New York State Assembly had unanimously passed the bill to help to remove any discrimination that Sabbath-observing Jews might suffer in seeking employment with state or city agencies. The bill, which was introduced by State Senator Paul Bookson, makes it illegal for any local state or city agency to refuse employment or promotion or to discharge any person on the grounds of his inability to work on certain days due to his religious observance, if he is willing to make up the lost time. The bill had previously unanimously passed the State Senate.

Agudah Israel of America hailed the passage of this bill as "a major victory for the religious Jewish community of New York State and for the American principles of religious freedom." The organization also declared that the passage of the Bookson Bill would bolster the chances of the passage of a similar bill benefitting federal employees introduced in the U.S. Congress by Rep. Jonathan Bingham, of New York.

HOW TO START YOUR OWN HOME FOR THE AGED

It's easy to start your own home for the aged, in Morocco, that is. All you need is a great love of people, an eye to see and recognize suffering and misery, a heart that seeks to alleviate it, and a willingness to spend yourself physically and financially to solve the problems of the homeless and helpless. Then you come to the Joint Distribution Committee, show them what you've done, explain what still remains to be done, and ask them to help you.

The Jewish population of El Jadida, better known by the Portuguese name of Mazagan and famous for its ancient water cistern built underground by the Portuguese in medieval days, numbered 1,400 five years ago. Today it numbers only 660 souls. It has something now, however, that it never had before, an old age home with 46 residents.

It all started with Joseph Ruimy, 33-year-old vice-president of the Jewish community in El Jadida. He saw his community slowly dwindling, its leadership and its young and active members moving to other parts of Morocco, or to other countries. But, as in other migrations, some of the aged and sick were being left behind and there were no community funds available to help them. Ruimy took upon himself the distribution of the funds and food packages sent to the town by the JDC office in Casablanca. But it was not enough; he could see this for himself. So he decided to do something about it.

His first step was to rent an 11-room house in a Jewish neighborhood. After some minor changes he made nine rooms available for living quarters, one for a kitchen and one for storage. The next task was more difficult. It required a lot of patience to persuade aged and sick people who had been living in isolated corners of the community to move from inadequate homes, often filthy and neglected, but nevertheless their own, into an old age home which constituted for them a potential danger to their independence. The resistance, however, was overcome as soon as word from resettled people reached other needy aged. In a few days Ruimy was faced with more applications than available space.

So he filed a request with the JDC office in Casablanca. With their help two additional buildings were adapted to the needs of the aged. Each home was repainted; electrical and plumbing repairs was done. A small pharmaceutical depot was installed in one of the homes. A nurse was engaged and arrangements were made for a physician to give some hours a week to see to the medical needs of the residents.

Ruimy, however, did not content himself with this achievement. The establishment of the formal shelter for the care of old people seemed to lack the human touch. So, inspired by a new idea, he succeeded, through many personal talks, in having some of the more affluent members of the community adopt a number of the beneficiaries. The adoptive families invite their old people for weekends and holidays and provide them with the social life so sorely needed by the lonely aged.

Joseph is not alone any more. He has found six colleagues, young, dynamic businessmen who formed a special committee and took upon themselves different assignments; one is responsible for financial problems, another for feeding programs, a third for upkeep of buildings. Each room has been decorated with pictures, plants, and other homelike touches. Two sewing machines were contributed and plans are under way to give sewing lessons to those women who are interested and are physically able to learn.

Joseph and his colleagues are proud of what they have accomplished. They point to an aged man of 95 who had been living in the mellah (ghetto) undernourished and bedridden and who now not only gets out of bed and cares for his needs but also takes short walks with his wife. They take pride in a woman who was thought to be paralyzed but who, after six weeks of medical care, can now stand alone and move from one chair to another.

They also take pride in the fact that their carefully planned program does not exceed $100 per person yearly. Half the funds comes from the local community and the other half from JDC, which is financed mainly by the United Jewish Appeal. The official inauguration of the old age home of El Jadida was attended by the Pasha, the mayor of the town, who not only expressed his high appreciation of the enterprise but also made a flattering comparison of Mr. Ruimy to the late King Mohammad V who "always extended love and help to needy people."

And the most rewarding item in the Pasha's greeting, presented in classic Arabic, was an invitation extended to the JDC representative to visit the municipally-sponsored old age home and offer suggestions for its improvement.

CONSERVATIVE AND REFORM DENOUNCE ORTHODOX LEADERS FOR ATTACKS ON NON-ORTHODOX IN ISRAEL

The heads of the rabbinic and congregational wings of American Conservative and Reform Judaism sharply denounced as intemperate and distorted statements by Orthodox Jewish leaders which attacked attempts by these branches to aid the development of non-Orthodox Judaism in the State of Israel. The statement also took issue with the remarks of Dr. Zerah Wahrhaftig, the Israeli Minister of Religion, who stated at the convention of the Rabbinical Council of America (Orthodox rabbinic association) that "complete, uninhibited, and unrestrained religious liberty exists in Israel."

The response of the Conservative and Reform leaders called Dr. Wahrhaftig's assertion "a complete, uninhibited, and unrestrained figment of his imagination. The simple truth is that religion in Israel is totally controlled by the Orthodox rabbinate. Non-Orthodox rabbis are denied the right to conduct weddings, officiate at funerals, or grant divorces, and have been harassed by the Orthodox rabbinate in Israel at every step in their efforts to establish non-Orthodox synagogues anywhere in Israel."

The statement was endorsed by Rabbi Jacob K. Shankman, of New Rochelle, president of the World Union for Profressive Judaism, representing international Reform, Liberal or Progressive congregations throughout the world.

At the convention of the Rabbinical Council of America in Fallsburg, New York, two leaders of Orthodox Judaism, Moses I. Feuerstein, president of the Union of Orthodox Jewish Congregations, and Rabbi Israel Miller, president of the Rabbinical Council, joined Dr. Wahrhaftig in attacks on Conservative and Reform Judaism.

The joint-statement responding to these attacks expressed sadness at the fact that Orthodox organizations in America turn their annual conventions into sounding-boards for polemical denunciations of Reform and Conservative Judaism. Non-Orthodox Judaism is growing steadily in Israel, as large numbers of Israelis seek more visible options than a choice between rigid Orthodoxy and nothing. In Israel there are hundreds of thousands of Jews who are religious but not Orthodox. The overwhelming majority of Jews in Israel or the United States, whatever their religious commitment, support the basic position of separation of Church and State, freedom of religious belief, and practice and instruction for all. The overwhelming majority of Jews oppose any attempt by governmental authority, in the United States or in Israel, to interfere with the expression of religion in any of its aspects."

The Conservative and Reform leaders also took exception to the claim of Dr. Wahrhaftig that two-thirds of the population of Israel attend Orthodox services:

"This is utterly unfounded. The best that might be said is that two-thirds of those who attend services at all, worship in the Orthodox fashion. The actual fact is that perhaps as many as two-thirds of the total population ignore regular worship altogether because they cannot accept Orthodoxy, the only option for worship available to them."

The Conservative and Reform Jewish leaders [illegible] attacks would only strengthen the determination of those Jews, in Israel and in the United States, to work for total religious freedom in Israel and for a dynamic, expression of Judaism in the Holy Land."

At the Orthodox convention, Mr. Feuerstein, who said that his organization represented 3,000 synagogues, accused Conservative and Reform Judaism of seeking to divide and fragmentize the Jewish community in the U.S. as well as in Israel.

The Conservative and Reform reply was: Mr. Feuerstein's pretensions seem to be based on the arrogant claim that the Orthodox alone represent the Jewish religious community both here and in Israel, and presume and assume that no other way of Judaism has any reason to exist. The monopolistic claim has an all too familiar refrain and constitutes a libel against millions of Jews in America and in Israel. In America there are several recognized and acknowledged Jewish religious communities."

There are 785 Conservative synagogues in America and 660 Reform temples. Each represents approximately one-billion adherents.

The statement concluded: "Jewish unity can only be maintained on the basis of pluralism, respect for difference and appreciation for religious liberty. There are genuine and fundamental differences between Reform and Conservative Judaism but these differences are treated with mutual respect. We have not chosen to attack each other or to impugn each other's integrity."

SHABBY, YEARLY DONOR OF $ ONE MILLION

Once, when he gave some land to the Hospital for Joint Diseases, he explained how he had gotten the tenants out of the houses to clear the way. He did not collect rent for four months, he said, and then announced that in a week he would be around to collect all the money owed to him. Before the deadline, all the tenants had fled.

He could not explain his interest in the health of student nurses beyond saying that they were often exposed to disease and he wanted to improve their lot, says the New York Times. "I have never been in love with one, or jilted by one," he remarked.

Dr. Fuld's care for the well-being of the nurses was extensive. He provided air-conditioning for their dormitories, and recreation areas and swimming pools. He even paid for the installation of a traffic light in Trenton so they would be safe crossing the street. Five institutions have Fuld scholarship funds for girls who aspire to be nurses.

In 1962, Baltimore, Maryland made him an honorary citizen because of his gifts to the Provident Hospital School of Nursing. He often lectured on the importance of health to student nurse gatherings and in 1961 he had the Burmese Ambassador to the United States come to Trenton to speak on student-nurse health in Burma.

Once an interviewer asked Dr. Fuld for a word of financial wisdom. "Here's something you must do," he replied. "Every month when you pay your bills, be sure to pay something to the most important person in the world — you."

THE HEBREW UNIVERSITY: ANOTHER LINK IN A PRECIOUS CHAIN

By Allan Bronfman, of Montreal, National President of the Hebrew University in Israel

The Hebrew University, Israel's foremost institution of higher learning, today in its 40th year of life, stands at the very forefront of Israel's and Jewry's near-herculean effort to pull a tiny, poor, and besieged nation literally by its own bootstraps, onto the road of self-support, economic independence and historical fulfillment. It is a struggle which by the very complexity of physical problems alone, cannot be solved by any one programme or any lone institution in any single brief span of time.

Despite unprecedented progress and a long and prideful list of accomplishments on the part of Israel and her inhabitants, the needs of the nation (which is still hampered and harassed by belligerent enemies at all her borders) continue to mount, for her continuing and unswerving obligations are to uplift the living standards, health and welfare of all her citizens, and constructively to absorb within everyday life and living in Israel, the thousands of newcomers trickling to her shores each month in order at long last to emerge from the degrading and debilitating shadow of persecution and pogrom that enveloped the place they once called home.

In all this, the Hebrew University has more than a role to play, for it is in fact, "the keeper of the nation's soul". Its major concern is not only to hasten the pace of Israel's consolidation and development through the pursuit of scientific research (and this year over 60% of all the scientific research being conducted in Israel is taking place at the Hebrew University), sharpening and developing the country's cultural capacities and broadening the scope of its intellectual outlook and endeavour.

The technique evolved by University scientists with which to launch a rocket into space has defensive value; the schools in medicine being conducted by the Hebrew University for students from the emerging nations of Africa and Asia are of political importance; the University trained geologists who venture into the Negev nothingness and discover deposits of rare minerals are of economic significance.

But on an equal plane is the housewife who achieved her Bachelor of arts degree by attending night classes at the University and thus has thought and concept to contribute within her social environment; the post graduate student working on a thesis concerning Contemporary Jewry; the ordained rabbi conducting research into a branch of mysticism at the University's Institute of Jewish Studies; the dozens of archaeological expeditions being spearheaded by University personnel to help to unearth the precious Jewish past, all this builds the spiritual stamina of the nation, of Jewry everywhere in the world, and indeed of humanity.

Canadian Jewry may well be proud of the part it has played over the years towards building a new home for the Hebrew University following its tragic exile from Mount Scopus, and has assisted in a most positive manner in maintaining the University and helping it to expand both its curriculum of professional training and programme of scientific research so that it could successfully meet the responsibilities placed before it.

And now, Canadian Jewry has helped Israel's national house of higher learning look toward the future as well, with the introduction of the Family Endowment Plan which has become a world-wide project to give the University stability and sustenance in the years to come.

With the understanding and interest of Canadians and Jewry in all other parts of the world, the University is steadfastly fullfilling the Weizmann prophecy of becoming "the alma mater of Israel reborn and the University of all the Jewish people," and in the year ahead it is our hope to forge still another link in the previous chain that binds us as Jews to this heritage and strengthens our ties with Israel and the Hebrew University, magnificent adventures of the human spirit in which we are privileged to have a part to play.

It is my sincere hope that the New Year will bring to Jewry in Canada, Israel, and everywhere, progress and happiness in full measure and to all mankind the peace and tranquility we so fervently pray for.

Eastern Nigerian Governor Welcomed In Israel

Israelis were privileged to play host to His Excellency the Governor of Eastern Nigeria, Sir Francis Akanu Ibiam, G.C.O.N.; K.C.M.G.; K.B.E.; LL.B.; D.Litt., accompanied by his wife, Lady Eudora Olaylnka Ibiam, on the occasion of their official visit to Israel during the summer months, says Israel News.

Their twelve-day stay was opened, in fitting fashion, by an official reception at the Presidential Residence in Jerusalem accorded by Zalman Shazar, the President of Israel, to which they were escorted by Dr. Zerah Wahrhaftig, the Minister for Religious Affairs. Sir Francis, who is a President of the World Council of Churches and a Ruling Elder of the Nigerian Presbyterian Church, was entertained at a gala dinner that same evening by Dr. Wardi, Counsellor on Christian Affairs to the Minister of Religious Affairs. Lady Eudora, who is Founder and President of the United Church Women of Nigeria, had a tea given in her honour by the Council of Women's Organizations in Israel.

The following days were taken up by a full series of tours to development sites, regional and rural projects, industrial installations and cooperative institutions up and down Israel. The visitors met Nigerian students in a number of places.

Sir Francis and Lady Eudora took a keen interest in religions and historical sites sacred to the great faiths, and had talks with various religious dignitaries. Galilee, with its wealth of mountain and forest, its Holy Sites, its relics of ancient glory and its promise of future splendour, made a deep and unforgettable impression on the eminent visitors.

Milestones on their pilgrimate of piety were places such as Mount Tabor, Tiberias, the Sea of Galilee, Capernaum, the Mount of the Beatitudes and Nazareth — to mention but a few.

"As a Christian I am grateful for the help given to Christian bodies here," Sir Francis declared in the course of a press conference given at the close of his stay. He also noted that Eastern Nigerian youth was taking eagerly to the idea of collective settlements, patterned on Israeli kibbutzim.
